The legend of Anarkali is the most poignant of the many love stories told of the days when the great Moghuls ruled over India from their capital Lahore, city of love and war.

It is a tale of love doomed to tragedy.

Anarkali was a dancer at the court of King Akbar. Such was her grace that the young Prince Saleem fell in love with her.

Their love flourished in secret.

In time, however, stories of her grace and beauty reached the King himself. She was summoned to appear before the royal presence.

As she danced, no one could mistake the looks which passed between her and the young prince. It was as if she danced for him alone.

The king was outraged.

The outcome was cruel and tragic. The girl was entombed, walled up in stone.

She was never forgotten by her prince. When Saleem became king Jahangir he created a magnificent mausoleum around the spot where she was buried. It still stands as a memorial to
